WOODPECKERS.

AN INTERESTING FAMILY OF BIRDS AND THEIR HABITS.

Some of Them are Useful, Others Are Injurious to Orchards—Kill the Sap-Suckers and Fruit Eaters, but Give the Carnivorous the Liberty of the Farm.

Few birds are so widely known in timbered parts of North America as the family known as wookpeckers. Yet little is known of their food habits. Even naturalists have made mistakes in both naming them and their food habits. The black and white woodpecker so common on this Coast was named Melanerpes formiciverous, or ant eating woodpecker, though the species seldom if ever feeds on ants. Here and in the East the Flickers principally feed on ants. The Flicker, or yellowhammer or highholder (Colaptes Mexicana) is very common throughout this Coast and is very nearly the counterpart of the Eastern Flicker (Colaptes auratus) in size, color and habits. Where the Eastern bird has bright golden yellow on the under parts of the wing and tail feathers, ours has bright yellowish scarlet, The Coast specimen has not the dark crimson spot on the top of its head, as has the Eastern. They are both quite harmless, and probably useful as they destroy myriads of ants. Ours is rather the more sprightly and shy bird and has one mischievous habit that makes them obnoxious in the country. This is pecking holes into buildings. Houses in timbered regions are often riddled in the upper part with these holes three inches in diameter. It is hard to understand why they have this habit. Some say they bore the holos so as to get inside the buildings for shelter during winter but this seems hardly plausible as one or two holes to a building would be plenty for this purpose. Yet they often make fifty or more holes in one building. A more probable theory seems to be that they peck on the building and, finding it hollow, peck out a hole, thinking it like the limb or trunk of a hollow tree—a good place in which to store food. These holes are generally bored in autumn. When they reach the interior they find the space too large so they try again. It is not positively known that they store up food. It may be a natural instinct causing them to experiment in finding nesting places. Their nests are invariably found in hollow trees. The writer is camping in an unpainted, isolated house in a wooded region and hardly a day passes without a call from one or more flickers tapping for an opening. They seem to prefer unpainted buildings and those painted white.

They are an interesting family of birds. Some of the species, though nearly alike in build, size and color, have entirely different habits. For instance, the ordinary observer would consider the hairy woodpecker, which feeds almost exclusively on grubs and borers found in trees and logs, and the sapsucker the same bird, so nearly are they alike. The sapsucker belongs to a sub genus of the woodpecker family. Its general food is the newly formed sapwood and inner bark of many species of trees, notably that of the apple and the pines. Instead of having the long, slender, barb pointed tongue of the true woodpecker, they have short, strong, chisel pointed tongues to help them in gathering food. These two birds are often seen in the same orchard. One hunting for the borers so injurious to the trees, eating thousands of the grubs of the codling moth hid under the old bark scales. They peck holes in the bark and deftly extract the grubs with their tongue, thus doing the orchardist vast benefit. The sapsucker, almost exactly like it, is busy doing the trees material injury by pecking small holes, in line up and down or around the trunk and branches, after its favorite food—the tender, newly formed sap wood. These holes on the apple trees are often so numerous and near together as to quite nearly girdle and greatly stunt and weaken the tree. When at work on some of the pines the sapsucker often removes great patches of bark, sometimes entirely around the trunk or branch which of course kills all growth above. In these we have two birds conspicuously alike occupying the same ground, the one beneficial, the other so far as known entirely injurious. I think it is not determined whether the sapsucker ever feeds on insect food or not. I have collected them at all seasons of the year and in no case found any food in their stomach except inner bark and sapwood of trees.

Harris' woodpecker takes the place on this Coast, occupied by the Hairy woodpecker east, and Gardiner's woodpecker that of the Downy. And curiously, all these birds in the East have exact counterparts on this Coast in size, form, general and food habits but quite different in coloration and voice. Thus the most common one here—known locally as the carpenter bird—is the exact counterpart of the redheaded woodpecker so ubiquitous in the East. Their every habit seems the same. Both are fly-catchers, taking insects on the wing, and frugivorous, feeding on fruits. They also peck into trees after grubs. Both have the habit of storing up quantities of nuts and acorns in holes pecked in the bark and rotten wood of trees. They use only a small percentage of what they store but it makes food for squirrels.

While in Lassen county, Cal., lately, I made the acquaintance of Lewis' woodpecker, called locally the apple bird from its habit of feeding on apples. It is a handsome dark green. It is found only in the interior mountains. Its food habits are nearly the same as the redheaded and carpenter birds. All the smaller woodpeckers and nutthatchers are harmless and beneficial. I shot a young male redshafted flicker recently. Its stomach contained useful carnivorous ground beetles of two species, a few small ants and clover seeds, intermixed with a few coarse grains of sand. Its tongue was 3¼ inches long beyond the tip of beak and could be stretched to 4 inches and it was barbed at the tip. My recollection is that the tongue of the golden flicker in the East is not barbed, and is of larger calibre and more slimy for sweeping up ants. D. B. WIER.

AN AWFUL CATASTROPHE.

Mr. Forceps, Being Unduly Inquisitive, Has a Pretty Hard Time of It.

[Copyrighted by Lee & Shepard, Boston, and published by special arrangement with them.]

Those of our readers acquainted on Monson street will remember that the roof to Mr. Forceps' saloon adjoins his house and is approached by two windows. One of these windows is in Mr. Forceps' bedroom. On this roof Mrs. Forceps has spread hesitating tomatoes with a view to hastening their ripeness. Last Wednesday she put five more with their fellows, making thirty in all. The Forcepses have a niece visiting with them—a young lady named Hall, of Thomaston. She has made the acquaintance of many of our young people, and on Wednesday night several of them got together to give her a serenade.

Providing themselves with requisite instruments the young men took up a position near this addition we speak of and struck up on the instruments. Mrs. Forceps was first awakened by the music, and nudged her husband. He also awoke. The music was grand—not loud or coarse, but soft, low and harmonious. Mr. Forceps was very much pleased, and got up to the window to hear it. Then Mrs. Forceps got up also, and retying her nightcap stood beside Forceps. "They're serenading Ellen," said she. "I know it," said Forceps. "Who can they be?" she asked. "I don't know, I'm sure," said he; "but I suppose I could find out if I could creep out on the roof and look over." "Why don't you?" said she, her curiosity increasing. "I'm afraid they might see me," he said. "I don't think they would," she said. "They wouldn't be looking up on the roof, would they?"

Mr. Forceps thought a moment, and then concluded that no one could see him, as the moon had gone into a bank of clouds and objects were quite dim. And then he softly opened the blind and cautiously crawled out on the shingles, completely incased in red flannel underclothes and a nightcap of the same rich material. The music still continued, coming up through the night air in waves of ecstatic harmony. Mr. Forceps sat down on the roof and laboriously worked his way to the eaves.

Then he lifted himself up to turn over and look down; and just then he stepped on something soft and yielding, felt his feet give, made a desperate clutch at the shingles, was too late, gave a piercing shriek and shot off the roof, and went revolving and howling in among the band, followed by the tomatoes, and madly cleaving the air with his red flannel limbs. He struck on his back on the bass viol, and with one leg tore the entrails from an accordion, and with the other knocked all the keys from a silver mounted flute.

The man who played the bass viol was driven senseless into a pile of pea brush, and the flute player, with his mouth full of blood and splinters, jumped over the fence and fled. What became of the others Mr. Forceps does not know, he being too busily engaged in getting on his feet and into the house to make a critical examination of the field. It is presumed the bass viol man died on the spot, and was surreptiously removed and buried by his companions, as there was no sign of him about the premises in the morning.

Intricacies of a Stovepipe.

Several million people have been trying this month to get the best of a stovepipe. But they haven't done it; they never have done it; they never will. However well they may have matched last year, no two lengths of pipe will match this year. You may put marks a foot long upon them, but this will not do. You may lock up each length in a room by itself, but yet when they come to be used you will find they will not come together as they came apart. We can't tell in what way it was done, but we are certain those lengths came out of that room in some way, and exchanged places with each. If not, why are they so unfitted to each other? It is utterly impossible to get the best of a stovepipe. What will expand one length will contract another, and even a single length has been known to expand at one end while it contracted at the other. There is a subtle influence in the atmosphere which causes this. No one has as yet been able to discover what this is, and until it is made known there is no use expecting to get a stovepipe safely together, even if you should set on the lengths all summer and have your meals brought to you.

"God Sees You."

As the 4:30 train from New York reached Stamford Wednesday, an antique looking dame thrust her head out of the window opposite the refreshment room door and briefly shouted, "Sonny!" A bright looking boy came up to the window. "Little boy," said she, "have you a mother?" "Yes, mam." "Do you love her?" "Yes, mam." "Do you go to school?" "Yes, mam." "And are you faithful to your studies?" "Yes, mam." "Do you say your prayers every night?" "Yes, mam." "Can I trust you to do an errand for me?" "Yes, mam." "I think I can too," said the lady, looking steadily down on the manly face. "Here is five cents to get me an apple. Remember, God sees you." J. M. BAILEY.

The Age of Combines.

Combines and trusts everywhere seem to be the order of the day. Cotton duck, lead paints, gypsum, sugar, everything nearly but sunlight, water and blizzards, and Jay Gould is said to be after them. The manipulators, combines and trusts have the farmer and fruit grower completely cornered in all central districts on this Coast, and they are squeezing him as dry as a cork. Now, why don't all the rural workers combine and make the others very sick of the business. The trouble with the farmers is that there are too many of them. He is slow to anger and firmly believes in the commandment "mind your own business." The farmers will combine yet. Give them a little more time. Then look out.

TWO TYPES OF BAD MEN

THE REAL THING IS IMITATED BY THE PLATED ARTICLE.

Sometimes It Is Hard to Tell Them Apart, Though, and in Experimenting One Is Liable to Run Up Against the Wrong Kind—Two Striking Examples.

"Bad men in the west break into two classes," said a gentleman, late of Silver City, "the sure enough and the imitation bad man. One is a killer and the other simply blusters. The two sorts look alike, talk alike, garb themselves in big hats, belt guns on their hips, swear and guzzle and follow each other's suit from first to last, for which reasons it is hard to tell the real thing from the counterfeit. The only sure way of distinguishing the true, solid silver bad man from the plated fellow is to test them as fast as presented.

"Russian Bill, who, in the early eighties was a rustler in the valley of San Simon in Arizona, and a singularly industrious horse and cattle stealer of that shadeless region, was an imitation bad man. He was a great talker, and—hear him tell it—had filled more graves than an epidemic. It is doubtful, however, if he ever drew human blood, and the other 'rustlers' similarly regarded him as a man of no courage. It turned out a case of the magpie and the peacocks with the Russian though, for one evening the impulsive denizens of Shakespeare, A. T., took Bill's word for it and incontinentally hung him de bene esse.

"The Russian had company, though, for they stretched another gentleman, time and tree the same, yclept Sandy King. There was no discount, however, on King. One could have taken a brace and bit and bored clear through him and struck nothing but clean strain game. King and Russian Bill were together on the occasion of their apprehension and taking off, and were decided specimens of the two types of bad men.

THE NAME OF BILL.

"Bill, as a name, has been the property of a good many of the fighters of the west. Frequently some affix or prefix went with it to keep the blood bedewed Bills from getting all mixed up. There have been a Curly Bill, a Wild Bill, a Navajo Bill, a Buffalo Bill, a Poker Bill, a Cheyenne Bill, a French Bill, an Antelope Bill, a Russian Bill, a Broncho Bill, a Canadian Bill, a Monte Bill, a Butcher Knife Bill and Bill Bonney, or Billy the Kid, that I have known of.

"Cheyenne Bill was and is one of the false killers referred to, and always trying to 'run a blazer' upon some tenderfoot and scare him to death. Raton, N. M.—pronounced 'Rahtoon'—does not, as a community, rise early of a Sunday morning, and as I once, back in 1883, came out of the hotel in the still and early hours of that holy day, I heard a voice over on the next street raised to a point between a threat and a command. My attention was at once attracted, and getting out where I could see I found Cheyenne Bill in slow but threatening pursuit of a reluctant tenderfoot who had come in on the train the night before. What the row was about I didn't know.

"'Stop whar you be, or I'll pull on you!' commanded the vaporish Bill in a fierce tone, his hand on his six-shooter and following along after the stranger some two rods behind.

"To give the tenderfoot his due, while he kept walking away from Bill, he appeared more disgusted than scared, and while he said nothing and did not turn on his would be captor, nevertheless he received his orders to halt with becoming contempt, and kept straight on.

BILL AND THE TENDERFOOT.

"Except for my presence, Cheyenne and his victim had the town to themselves, Jack Hixenbaugh, the marshal, and the rest of the citizens being sensibly in bed. I had seen a Chinaman run Cheyenne around once over in Trinidad, and knew there was no more to be feared from him than from the last calf on the range, and shouting over to him I so informed the person from the east and advised him to go after the doughty Cheyenne and pull his head off. The tenderfoot had about made up his mind to do it anyhow, and my vote settled it. He turned and started for Bill, whereupon that person at once lost all his valor and fled briefly.

"The tenderfoot caught up with him, however, and eased his surcharged soul by three or four forceful and very meritorious kicks. This seemed to do both Bill and the shortharn a world of good, and the former avoided the fifth by plunging up a stairway. The tenderfoot wanted to charge after Bill and kill him completely, but I urged a different view and pointed out the fact that Bill took his gun with him and that if he found himself cornered he might shoot.

"Curly Bill was another of the riotous and desperate sort. His range in 1881 and 1882 was southwestern New Mexico and eastern Arizona. No one knew where Curly Bill hailed from, but if there's truth in Scripture, where he was going was plain to all. He was reputed, when I saw him, to have killed nineteen men, and had the air of one who was looking hard for a chance to make it a score. Curly Bill has found his grave somewhere out in the arid wastes he patroled, as nothing has been heard of him for some time."—Kansas City Star.

Gave Himself Away.

One day in a chat with a friend he said to me: "Has it ever occurred to you that when old age deprives you of much of your present ability to earn a living you will be obliged to look to your friends for support, or else become a charge at some one of the charitable institutions?" I confess I am neither a money maker nor a money saver, but "it is dollars to doughnuts" that the person who thus twitted me of my weakness simply echoed as he did so the general plan which he, in the cold blood of middle age, is counting on as his resource when he shall get too old to be indispensable.—Detroit Free Press.

HE SANG "COMRADES."

A Baritone Gets Applauded by an Audience Ninety Miles Away

John E McWade, the well-known baritone, was at the Columbia with Hallen and Hart's "New Later On." Mr. McWade, it will be remembered, is the singer who popularized "Comrades," but he is a nice fellow in spite of that. He and his little family have a delightful home at Mount Vernon, near New York city. During the summer Mr. McWade sang in light opera in Milwaukee, and in every production, whether the scene was laid in Venice or Japan, the audience howled for "Comrades" until John stepped to the footlights, winked at the leader of the orchestra and proceeded to render that venerable ballad as he only can render it.

When here he and his wife stopped at the Windsor hotel. Early one morning Chief Clerk Jasper received a message saying that Baritone McWade was wanted at the public telephone station, where a party in Milwaukee desired to hold converse with him. Mr. Jasper carried the message to the McWade parlors in person.

The baritone was indulging in his morning nap, or beauty sleep, when he learned what was wanted. He hastily arose, donned his clothes and rushed over to the telephone station, where he entered the long distance telephone box and took up the receiver.

"Hello!" he shouted, "is that Milwaukee?"

"Yes," came the answer, faint but clear. "Is that John McWade?"

"It is," replied the singer. "Who is that?"

"I'm Billy Crosby, from Chicago."

"Hello, Billy! what are you doing up there?"

"Had to run up here on business last night. Say, John, I want you to do me a favor, if you will."

"With pleasure. What is it?"

"Just sing me the first verse and chorus of 'Comrades,' will you?"

"Well, I'll be ——," said McWade half to himself and the other half to Crosby in Milwaukee.

"Go ahead, John. I've paid the tolls I'd give five dollars to hear 'Comrades' now. If you'll sing I'll open a small bottle when I meet you tomorrow."

"All right; here goes," replied McWade with a laugh, and he started in on "Comrades," singing it as he never sang it before. One of the messenger boys tiptoed over and quietly opened the door of the long distance box.

Then the whole force of the office knocked off work and drank in the superb melody as it rolled from the baritone's lungs to Milwaukee by wire. As he wound up the song with a high note he heard Crosby say, "Wait a minute, John." Then he plainly heard the Milwaukee receiver drop and Crosby clap his hands vigorously in front of the transmitter. It was genuine applause from ninety miles away, and it sounded as sweetly to the singer as though it had been the roar of a vast audience.

"Thanks, John. That was great. The bottle goes. Tell Clayton to put it on ice now," came the faint voice. "Good by."

"Goodby," said John, and he chuckled all the way back to his hotel.—Chicago Post.

A European Idea.

A matrimonial clubhouse is among recent innovations in a European city. It is a large, roomy building, divided into several apartments, in one of which portraits of each woman subscriber are exhibited, with full descriptions of her age, talents, fortune, color of hair, eyes etc., size of hands and feet, and measurements of the bust and general contour. There is also a brief account of her life, whether widow or spinster, and of her particular penchant in alliance with bachelor or widower, merchant lawyer or jurist, etc., all nicely tabulated and set forth. In another room are the portraits of men candidates for connubial bliss, but the descriptions are less elaborate, and confine themselves to an enumeration of the social status of the candidate and his financial condition.

A general reading room provides a medium for mutual meeting, and is presided over by an ancient dame who knits interminable stockings. There are also private rooms for more confidential tete-a-tete. One of the curious rules of the place is that only ladies may enter the room where the men's portraits are, and men only are admitted to the women's gallery. They must meet in the common room. The establishment is conducted on moral principles, and the number of matches on its books approximates 1,000.—New York Sun.

A Collection of Crowns.

A whole collection of crowns is kept at the royal palace (the Kremlin) at Moscow, Russia. These relics of departed greatness—they nearly all come from countries which have been subjugated by the Russians—are kept in what is known as the "Throne Room" of the Kremlin. Here are shown the crowns of Poland Kazan, Georgia, Astrakhan and Persia, besides the thrones and other royal insignia too numerous to mention. Besides the crowns of conquered nations those of almost all the czars may be seen in that vast treasure house.

The most curious one of the lot is the double crown made for Peter the Great and his half witted brother; the most costly that of the Empress Catherine, which contains 2,536 diamonds of the first water.—St. Louis Republic.

TWITTERING SWALLOWS.

In and out and under the eaves,
Blown about like the falling leaves,
Twittering swallows spend the season.
Now the days are shorter and chill,
There come from many a musical bill
Notes of instinct that sound like reason.

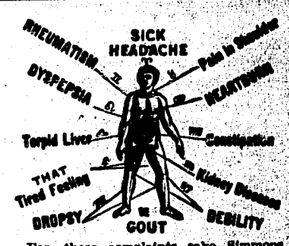
Well have they dined on bug and midge,
Now they are perched upon the ridge
Of the old barn, that's warped and hoary.
There they sit, bright birds of a feather,
Holding twitter-talk all together,
Each telling an after dinner story.

They will follow the summer bland;
To them no land is a foreign land.
One exclaimed, with a joyous flitter,
"True cosmopolitans are we,
Home is where we happen to be,
And swallows understand our twitter."

Then, in soft notes I scarce could catch
One spoke of a nest under the thatch
Of a cottage where waves the willow.
Another shook his velvet head,
And with his noisy neighbors plead
To fly with him o'er field and billow.

They talked about all sorts of things;
Sharpened their bills and preened their wings.
Then away, away, the tourists started.
Sailing over river and main,
Will they ever return again
To the old home from which they've parted?

O happy tourists of the air,
Unburdened, free of debt and care,
Would that I had swift wings to follow
In the flight over land and sea,
With heart as light and wing as free
As the happy traveling swallows!
—Gertie M. Blaney in Barnes' Home.



For these complaints take Simmons Liver Regulator. It keeps the stomach clear and prevents any of the above poisons from getting in the system, or, if there already it will drive them out, no matter how strongly rooted or long-standing, and you will again have good health and be happy.

Have you a pain in the side, back or under the shoulder-blade? It is not rheumatism but dyspepsia. Take Simmons Liver Regulator.

Does your heart throb violently after unusual exertion or excitement? It is not heart disease, but indigestion.

Take Simmons Liver Regulator.

"As a matter of conscient duty to humanity I wish to bear my testimony to the unfailing virtues of Simmons Liver Regulator. If people could only know what a splendid medicine it is, there would be many a physician without a patient and many an interminable doctor's bill saved. I consider it infallible in malarial infection. I had, for many years, been a perfect physical wreck from a combination of complaints, all the outgrowth of malaria in my system, and, even under the skillful hands of Dr. J. P. Jones, of this city, I had despaired of ever being a well woman again. Simmons Liver Regulator was recommended to me. I tried it; it helped me, and it is the only thing that ever did me any good. I persevered in its use and I am now in perfect health. I know your medicine cured me and I always keep it as a reliable 'stand by' in my family."—MRS. MARY RAY Camden, Ala.

Her Son Danny.

An old woman who was selling peanuts from a basket was sitting in the shade of some freight near the Fort Lee steamer landing, and after we had talked a bit she said:

"Five years ago my son Danny was drowned in this very slip and I often come down here and sit and think of him."

"That was sad to lose a son that way," I replied.

"And such a good boy as my Danny was! He never gave me one moment's worry."

"How old was he?"

"Going on twenty, sir, and he dearly loved his own mother. He sat right on that beam there with his feet over the water, and he probably fell asleep. All to once he fell in, and though the boys tried to save him he never came up again. It was an awful blow, sir."

"Must have been."

THE REPUBLICAN PRESS.

FRIDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 20, 1891

THE REPUBLICAN PRESS is virtually the official paper of the county. All information concerning taxes, licenses, roads, etc., and all ordinances and orders made by the Board of Supervisors are published in its columns. If you want the county news in full, look to the PRESS for it.

THE Chilian question seems to remain unchanged. Neither government has given its ultimatum.

THE Brazilians are revolting at the authority of the Dictator, and according to the dispatches a revolution is imminent.

THE Australian ballot makes the use of boodle for buying votes a rather doubtful investment. The buyer cannot see his goods delivered and must trust to his purchase to keep faith. Now a man who can be bought cannot be trusted out of sight.

OUR esteemed but disgruntled contemporary has been trying to convince the taxpayers that the rate is too high this year. This is a difficult job, as the taxpayers themselves are quite well satisfied. The taxpayers also appreciate the fact that the Board have done the best they could considering that they have set aside $1900 to make a payment on the court house, and have to build a hall of records and jail, besides providing for a large amount of bridge work.

THE Farmers' Alliance which promised to revolutionize American politics has had a mighty fall. In Iowa, Kansas, and Nebraska, its strongholds, it is cut down over one half. The movement was ill born and badly led. Its inception was in a bad crop year, and its doctrine that of dispair. It promised much relief, had an opportunity to demonstrate its power, and failed utterly. It undertook the huge experiment of remodeling a government already as good as the Statesmanship of a hundred years could make it. Its birth, development, and fall, emphasize the fact that our government is good, and that the two great political parties cover all the contested points in its further upbuilding.

AN effort is being made to drive the demi monde from the city; A laudable undertaking, truly, but usually resulting in a failure. However, it remains to be seen what can be accomplished. Everybody is signing the petition. There is one feature of the business that can and should be speedily abolished, and that is the macques, or hangers on, those vultures in the semblance of men who live off the shame of fallen women. No revolution of sentiment is needed to drive out these hyenas that infest our town. The respectable people of Ukiah should see that the officers do their duty. The fact that that class exist in town is evidence that the officers have not done their duty. No complaint is needed to bring them to justice. The fact of any one living without visible means of support is prima facia evidence of criminality. The authorities should immediately take cognizance of every man in Ukiah who lives by gambling and by hanging around houses of ill fame, and without further preliminaries notify him to leave town. Both pursuits are not only highly obnoxious to the good taste of any community, but direct violations of law. From such classes emanate most of the crime committed. Let our officers do their duty. The PRESS will not hesitate to call public attention to any man (?) who is found to belong to the above class.

THE Republicans throughout the country have reason to rejoice at the victory of Major McKinley. His brave and splendid vindication of the National policy of the party will command the gratitude of true Republicans everywhere, as it has won the approval of the people of Ohio. But in other states as well as in Ohio the Republicans had to contend against tremendous odds. The prestige of an unprecedented success last year helped the Democrats, and also the control of the State governments in nearly all the contested States. Stronger always on National than on local issues, the Republican party was nevertheless confronted in this State by opponents who dodged National questions completely. One result is that their local success in New York and Massachusetts has no meaning as respects the struggle that is coming, while the victory of Major McKinley means much. With the general result, therefore, the Republicans have no reason to be disheartened. They rejoice in some splendid victories already achieved, and point to these as proof that another year of similar progress and achievement will give them a National triumph. They will not fail to see where they have erred most and why. In the contest that is coming it will not be enough to divert the attention of voters from the National issues as which last year has proved that cannot be won.—N. Y. Tr.

COMMUNICATED.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN PRESS. I see by reading the Dispatch-Democrat that that paper complains of the location of the Hall of Records and censures the Supervisors. It is not to be expected that anything the Supervisors may do will please that paper. It does not give the real reason of its being so displeased about the actions of the Supervisors, but everyone knows it is because the paper loses a certain amount of printing on account of Standley resigning. Why doesn't it pour its vial of wrath upon Standley? The paper helped to elect him, and had reason to suppose that he would return the favor. Its position is peculiar, for if Standley is again nominated it would have to work as before, so the paper is quiet on the real cause of complaint and in its vindictiveness stabs at the Supervisors upon every pretext.

Now about the location of the Hall of Records. The Supervisors who voted to place it on the Court House square do not live in Ukiah or near there, have no property there, and have no interest in the location except to please the majority. This cannot be said of the few who urged the placing of the building on the lot belonging to the county. Supervisors Stickney, Duncan, and Rea, took pains to ascertain the pleasure of property owners as to their choice of location, and at least four-fifths of those spoken to said, "put it on the Court House square."

After the petition not to build on the square was circulated, the Supervisors spoke to many who had signed the petition, and they still said as between the two locations—the square and the county lot—by all means build on the square. The petition did not say to put it on the lot, and they thought it would be better to purchase one of the corners opposite the square. The Supervisors, still anxious to please inquired the price of these corners, and concluded that the taxpayers would not be pleased with this considerable additional expense, especially when the majority wanted it placed on the square.

The motives of the Supervisors in this matter cannot be impugned. They consulted the interests of the taxpayers and the wishes of the property holders of Ukiah and acted accordingly.

GREENWOOD ITEMS.

The Catholic church fair held here lately, aided by the fair weather, was a success financially and otherwise.

Things in general preserve the even tenor of their ways—the industrial and classes who are not pursuing their daily avocations.

Our road overseer is now engaged in turnpiking, macadamizing, and boulevarding the main county road, commencing at its most Southern point at Malo Paso. It is hoped that he will not fail to turn his attention to that branch of it which extends 10 or 11 miles toward Anderson Valley from Cuffey's Cove, and make the necessary repairs, which will not be so great now that the heavily laden lumber teams have been taken off the route.

The village of Greenwood, large and populous for its age, lying on the North side of a creek bearing the same name, is chiefly a lumbering, saw mill, and shipping center and has yet to acquire the two important village adjuncts, a school house and church. The population, some of whom escaped the diligence of the census enumerator last year, is of the composite order, and of many nationalities. Although improving and assimilating, even slowly, to American methods and ways, there is yet room for further improvement among us, as was witnessed at a Fourth of July meeting here when the event was signalized by one of our denizens hoisting a European flag to the peak of his flag pole with the "stars and stripes" playing second fiddle. The deluded gentleman is not apt to repeat the experiment.

The name, Greenwood, belonged to a family of five young men, who, in 1856, settled on a coast tract of land extending from Elk Creek to that about two miles north of it, and known since as Greenwood Creek, and adjoins the present village. They were John and Britton Greenwood, brothers, the oldest two, and their half brothers, Boggs, William and James Greenwood. Britton or Brit., as he was familiarly called, was at the head of the household and was very hospitable and entertaining. He would, occasionally, modestly recount to and intimate the hardships of the party which he piloted to the rescue of the Donner Lake emigrants, as well as depict the dreadful suffering of the principals, an expedition from which he ever after suffered from frozen feet until his final rest. An early legislature of this State voted him thanks and a bounty or pension. The former he greatfully appreciated but the latter he graciously declined to accept, since then he was not in need of the world's goods. He loved at times to enthuse his hearers with the delicious strains of his "Cremona" in rendering "The Arkansaw Traveler". He could not afford to release a guest before he dilated and discussed to him on the excellent traits and merits of his once famous stallion, "Nigger Baby", whose progeny has been well and favorably known through a large portion of the State. ROAD BUILDING.

How to Call out First-Class Talent in this Branch.

[Read by C. A. Beckwith at the recent County Alliance meeting at Lompoc.]

The spending of millions on public roads which remain unimproved, has aroused so much attention that you can hardly take up a paper from outside, without finding an essay on the subject.

Last winter our legislators tried to remedy the evil by passing a bill which makes each supervisor ex-officio road-master of his district.

I see but one thing in favor of the new law, viz., if a road master has some pet project in road expenditure, he will have to talk his supervisor into it. Only one class of men are educated to build roads scientifically. These are engineers who are taught to view a route and make a survey and estimate of cost, furnishing data for sub and superstructures and other matters involving expense and yet we are not utilizing these men as we ought.

Let me relate an instance as an example of the difference between what we get. A great University in an Eastern State is situated a mile from the depot. Every passenger train brings to the town, which has grown up around the depot, tourists who desire to visit the University, but for years in rainy weather, the mile was impassable. A neighboring creek with low banks overflowed it at every rain, making a problem which a common road master could not solve. The University prepared thoroughly and graduated each year a class of civil engineers, and there were many men in the faculty well versed in such matters, but the united advice of the professors had no effect on the road master. In desperation the grayhaired president resolved to take that office himself, and did so, apparently deriving as much satisfaction from the title of road master as he did from those of U. S. Senator and college president. Within one year he drained the surrounding sloughs and raised and macadamized the road bed, making an easy drive in all weather.

I think I have shown that a special education is necessary to enable a man to build roads well, and I appeal to my audience to decide whether a supervisor is any more likely to have this special education than a master, and if not, then the work is still not in the proper hands. Cities have solved the problem for themselves and for us, if we will learn the lesson. They have done away with the office of City Surveyor, and have substituted that of city engineer.

By so doing, they have secured roads built on scientific principles, and if we would follow in their steps, abolishing the office of County Surveyor and replacing it by that of County Engineer, we, too, might receive some benefit from the heavy taxes extracted for road purpose. County Surveyors were necessary until the public land was surveyed, but the office has survived its usefulness, and county political conventions recognize this fact by waiting until they have nothing else to do, when, if any man will accept, they nominate him for County Surveyor.

If every surveyor were an engineer, my argument would fall to the ground but it is not true while every engineer is a surveyor and could do such work which requires an engineer. At present the surveyor, who surveys a road, has no power to compel a road master to work according to that survey.

I can weary you with instances where the road has been run above or below the line at the road master's pleasure, while the surveyor has had to bear the blame.

An engineer can do us but little good if clothed with no authority to enforce his ideas: but to make it his duty to furnish plans and specifications, to advise as to material and to supervise all roadwork, allowing the road master no pay unless he has followed directions, the engineer in turn to be under the control of the supervisors, and we shall make of it a desirable office that will call out first-class talent, and our roads will be so improved as to save a vast amount to farmers in animal power instead of being a sink-hole into which money is poured.

I repeat these facts to our legislative committee, hoping that they will join in asking the State Legislative Committee to formulate and urge the passage of a bill embodying the suggestions made in this essay.

A GREAT MAGAZINE.

The Century's Programme in 1892—A New "Life of Columbus"—Articles for Farmers, etc.

That great American periodical, "The Century," is going to outdo its own unrivaled record in its programme for 1892, and as many of its new features begin with the November number, new readers should commence with that issue.

In this number are the opening chapters of a novel by Rudyard Kipling, the famous author of "Plain Tales from the Hills," written in collaboration with an American writer, Wolcott Balestier. It is the story of a young man and a young woman from a "booming" Colorado town, who go to India, he in search of a wonderful jeweled necklace, called "the Naulahka" (from which the story takes its name), and she as a physician to women. The novel describes their remarkable adventures at the court of an Indian maharajah. Besides this, "The Century" will print three other novels during the year, and a great number of short stories by the best American story-writers.

The well-known humorist Edgar W. Nye ("Bill Nye) is to write a series of amusing sketches which he calls his "autobiographies", the first one of which "The Autobiography of a Justice of the Peace", is in November. This number also contains a valuable and suggestive article on "The Food-Supply of the Future", which every farmer should read, to be followed by a number of others treating especially of the relations of the Government to the farmer, what it is doing and what it should do. This series will include contributions from officers of the Department of Agriculture, and other well-known men will discuss "The Farmer's Discontent", "Co-operation", etc. etc.

A celebrated Spanish writer is to furnish a "Life of Columbus", which will be brilliantly illustrated, and the publishers of "The Century" have arranged with the managers of the World's Fair to print articles on the buildings, etc.

One of the novels to appear in 1892 is

A STORY OF NEW YORK LIFE

by the author of "The Anglomaniacs", and the magazine will contain a great deal about the metropolis during the year,—among other things a series of illustrated articles on "The Jews in New York". In November is an illustrated description of "The Players' Club", founded by Edwin Booth, and one of the features of the splendidly illustrated Christmas (December) number is an article on "The Bowery".

To get "The Century" send the yearly subscription price ($4.00) to "The Century Co". Union Square, New York, N. Y.

A Perfect Baking Powder.

The constantly growing demand for Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, the standard cream tartar powder for forty years, is due to two causes.

FIRST:—The extreme care exercised by the manufacturers to make it perfectly pure, uniform in quality, and of highest raising power.

SECOND:—The recent investigations exposing the fact that certain other brands of baking powder contain ammonia and still others that were found to contain alum. These unscrupulous manufacturers are being found out, and the consumers are giving them a wide birth.

Nothing is left to chance in the manufacture of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder. Chemists are employed to test every ingredient as to purity and strength. Hence; its marvelous purity and uniformity. Each can is like every other. It never dissapoints. BEST is ALWAYS the CHEAPEST.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is reported by all authorities as free from Ammonia, Alum, or any other adulterant. In fact, the purity of this ideal powder has never been questioned.

Here is an opportunity for Ukiah to distinguish herself by getting up a subscription list to aid San Francisco in this matter. No other town has thought of it. We will be the first. What do our people say to getting up a subscription immediately. It may never avail anything but it will advertise the town. Let us seize the opportunity.

AN IMPORTANT BILL.

The Royal Baking Powder Condemned in the New York Legislature.

[New York Press, April 13, 1891.]

Last Monday Mr. Kelly introduced the following bill in the Assembly. A careful reading of it will show that it is a very important one.

AN ACT to prevent the use of poisonous and injurious ingredients in baking powders,

WHEREAS, Baking Powders manufactured in this state, known as the "ROYAL" alum and other Baking Powders are advertised for sale as absolutely pure; and,

WHEREAS, Official examination show them to contain ammonia and other injurious ingredients; therefore THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1.—Every can or package of baking powder containing Ammonia offered for sale in this State shall have a conspicuous label thereon with the words "Contains Ammonia" printed thereon in plain type, not smaller than great primer and any person who shall sell, or have or offer for sale, any such can or package of baking powder without such label thereon, shall be guilty of misdemeanor.

Section 2.—This act shall take effect July 1, 1891.

Normal School Opening.

The Normal Class will open the first Monday in Dec. in the McGlashan building with Miss Ida L. Simpson as teacher.

Following are extracts from recommendations, relative to Miss Simpson's abilities as a teacher.

ELSINORE, SAN DIEGO CO.

I take pleasure in certifying that Miss Ida L. Simpson who was Vice Principal in our school during the past year gave universal satisfaction.
S. M. Cambern
Attorney at Law.

RED BLUFF, June 16, 1891.

At the annual examinations for promotion and graduation which are held by the Board of Education, and not by the teachers, Miss Simpson's pupils ranked first, which is the best possible index of a teacher's success.

Chrysanthemums in Profusion.

They were to be found at the Presbyterian Church last Thursday evening, likewise plenty of jolly people to enjoy them. The fair, though gotten up hurridly was a confirmed success. It was one of those catchy events that everyone seemed to enjoy. There were literary exercises, the fair, and a general good time afterwards, enlivened by refreshments. The Church presented a pretty sight with its flower decorations. There were numerous pieces which deserve especial mention. Most of the flowers were sold at the close of the entertainment and brought a neat sum. The receipts were $50.

"Let There Be Light."

Captain Isbell received a letter Tuesday from C. B. Johnson at San Francisco, the electrician of the proposed works in Ukiah, stating that he had bought two dynamos for the works here, and they were on board the cars ready for shipment. He had also purchased the necessary poles, and as soon as the dynamos arrived, in about two weeks, would begin work.

From this we may conclude that electric light for Ukiah is an assumed fact.

The power will probably be furnished by the planing mill.

The New England Dinner.

The reporter who represented the PRESS at the New England Dinner given by the Baptist Church Friday has never been in New England, but he is convinced that if this dinner is a sample, they must live well there. As might be supposed there was plenty for all, and of a good quality. The dinner was highly appreciated and proved a remunerative undertaking for the church.

Hogs Killed.

It is reported that a number of hogs have been killed and skinned near the headwaters of Anderson Valley Creek. The owner of the hogs, the invincible Dave Elkins, wishes to inform the culprit that Dave is not dead yet, and gives him fair warning not to repeat the offense, as he will push the case regardless of age, color, or previous condition of servitude.

The ladies of the church have recently had the seats of the church painted and a fence put up in front of the church. They are now endeavoring to raise funds to have the outside of the building painted and to get a new carpet. The proceeds of the entertainment will be used for that perpose.

Potter on the Quivive.

The people of Potter were thoroughly alive on Saturday, November 14th. It was the occasion of the reception of the Russian River bridge by the City Fathers from the Contractor, L. B. Frasier. Everybody was there. The Trustees found that the bridge was a good structure and built well up to the specifications, in some points excelling them. After the reception of the bridge the company indulged in an old fashioned basket picnic, using the bridge on which to spread the collation. A most enjoyable time was had. CORRESPONDENT.

Rustling the Licenses.

District Attorney White is busy rustling the license payers of various businesses in the county. A number of suits have already been brought and others will follow in quick succession. All businesses without licenses were liable to suit on Nov. 1st, and now on Nov. 20th many are without license. Take this friendly hint and don't be caught napping.

Boundary Survey Completed.

The remainder of the surveying party returned Saturday, and Sunday Sam Rice went to San Francisco. He will immediately go to work on his field notes and prepare his report to the Supervisors. The strip of land Mendocino county gains by the survey is nearly two miles wide. Trinity people who live in the strip are well pleased with the accession.

At the Asylum.

W. I. Baily has secured the subcontract from Bateman Bros. for the plastering and cement work at the Asylum. He will commence in about three weeks. He will require from six to ten men, and the work will extend until the completion of the building. Baily is a good workman and is to be congratulated.

How it Affects Him.

The more stores that are selling out and freezing out the more business C. Hofman is doing; so much more that he has to take new clerks in (not boys, but experienced men) to help him. He has more clerks than any other business house in town. *

STAGE ROBBERY.

The Willits Stage Held up Last Sunday Morning.

The Willits stage was held up Sunday morning last about 8 o'clock, near Dan Southard's place, by a lone highwayman.

The driver, Chas. Lambert, threw out the box upon the presentation of a gun, supposed by him to be a Winchester. The robber called for the mailsack and the driver told him to chuck the wheels as the stage was on a down grade and the brake wouldn,t hold. The robber did not comply but took the W. F. box and walked away.

The driver started back toward Willits and met H. T. Hatch who came on to Ukiah and informed Sheriff Standly. Careful search was at once instituted but as yet the man has not been found, and there seems to be scarcely any clue to him. The box is supposed to contain very little if any money.

The War Cloud.

The great exertion made by all of the European powers towards perfecting their armies and navies is certainly indicative of trouble in the near future.

Government officials all over Europe are watching, with an eagle eye, Russia's extensive preparations for war, and her rivals on all sides are making counter-preparations for the great struggle which must sooner or later take place.

Enormous sums of money have been expended in the construction of strategic railroads and other ways arranging for the transportation of large bodies of troops to their frontiers.

Germany and France, with their magnificent armies and navies, drilled to a perfection that the world has never before witnssed, are watching each other with the utmost suspicion and it is the belief of many, high in the councils of the French government that she would openly declare war to-morrow were it not for the fact that, so far, she has been unable to close a contract wherein her army and navy could be fully supplied with Golden Eagle Flour.

A Rare and Interesting Book.

The Artistic Guide to Chicago and the World's Columbian Exposition is brimful of valuable information, reciting the most noted incidents in the rise and progress of Chicago from the first rude cabin in 1779, by a Sangomengoon slave until the present time.

This book will be an invaluable guide to Californians visiting the fair, as well as being a vast amount of information to the homes of our inhabitants generally, for the perusal of its pages, especially, by the young and rising generation, it being the 400th anniversary since 1492, the discovery of this new world by Christopher Columbus, thence the name "Columbian". This exceedingly valuable book is now ready for delivery, Thos. McCowen of Ukiah having the agency, but as infirmities of age and inclemency of the weather may retard the canvass those anxious of immediate possession of the work will please meet him half way or call on him at his home in Ukiah.

Mathematical Problem.

EDITOR PRESS: A friend submits the following problem and wishes a solution; who will be good enough to determine its requirements?

Given five sides and four interior angles of a hexagonal field, to find the remaining side and angles, and area of field.

Description of boundaries is as follows: Commencing at a point or angle, at A, and running N. 35 degrees W. 14 chains to a point or angle, at B, thence N. 10 chains to C, thence N. 35 degrees E. 10 chains to D, thence E. 5 chains to E, thence S. 55 degrees E. 13 chains to F, and thence in a direct line to the initial point at A.

It is required to find the length of the side A F, and the magnitude of the interior angles at A and F, and the area of field. Respectfully,

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

TWO LITTLE LEOPARDS.

How These Curious Spotted Babies Thrived in a Zoological Garden.

Once on a time two little creatures were born in a fine house in a beautiful garden, there were bright flowers and rare animals there, and in their own apartment all was arranged for their comfort.

They were curious little fellows, both in spotted coats; and when they were hungry their cries were not at all like the cries of other babies, but like the cries of kittens. In truth, these fellows were little leopards born in a zoological garden. Only one thing made discord in their beautiful home. Strange to say their mother, having no mother love for her little babies, had been so unnatural and cruel as to eat up an elder sister of theirs for her Christmas dinner. So it was thought best to take these twins away and give them to a nurse who would take good care of them. In this extremity the wife of one of the keepers volunteered to take the baby leopards. It was a long time before the leopards learned to use a feeding bottle, but finally they would struggle for its possession, and often they tore their mistress' clothes in their efforts to reach it first.

When they played together it was much like the play of kittens, though more clumsy, for their paws were so large that when they ran over the floor the noise they made sounded like children running, and they would creep stealthily, with their bodies crouched low to the floor, around the sides of the room, rarely running freely in the center of the floor. One of their favorite playthings was an old dustbrush, and that they would toss up in the air and worry it when it came down, as a cat proceeds with a mouse.—Wide Awake.

Frogs at School.

Twenty froggies went to school
Down beside a rushy pool;
Twenty little coats of green,
Twenty vests all white and clean.
"We must be in time," said they;
"First we study, then we play,
That is how we keep the rule
When we froggies go to school."

Master Bullfrog, grave and stern,
Called the classes in their turn.
Taught them how to nobly strive,
Likewise how to leap and dive;
From his seat upon the log,
Showed them how to say "Ker-chog!"
Also how to dodge a blow
From the sticks which bad boys throw.

Twenty froggies grew up fast;
Bullfrogs they became at last;
Not one dunce among the lot,
Not one lesson they forgot;
Polished in a high degree,
As each froggie ought to be;
Now they sit on other logs
Teaching other little frogs.

Old Mussentouchit.

There was one word the little girl heard many times a day and could not imagine what it was, says Golden Days. The word was Mussentouchit. Baby wondered who Mussentouchit could be. The strange thing lived in the bureau drawers; it lived in the sewing machine; it lived in the tall jar that stood on the little round table; it certainly lived in the glass globe where the goldfishes swam.

This went on till baby was two years old. Mussentouchit was everywhere—in the shining books on the parlor table; in the flower beds; among the roses; even in mamma's workbasket the strange thing lived; and if baby took up a reel of silk or cotton there was Mussentouchit.

One day baby found herself by the glass globe all alone. The family were very busy, and for a few minutes forgot the little, prying, restless darling.

This was her chance. Up went the chubby legs into the chair that stood near the goldfish globe. Poised on the rounding cushion baby reached far over to touch the goldfish. In reaching she lost her balance and fell, dragging the globe to the floor. There was a crash, a scream, a rush and mamma was on the spot. Baby was picked up, kissed and scolded.

"I dess I tilled old Mussentouchit 'is time!" she said, shaking herself and walking off.

Stockings or Scales.

If I were asked of all things what I most would like to be,
I'd choose to be a mermaid and live below the sea.
How nice, instead of walking, to swim around like little whales,
And to wear instead of stockings many shiny pairs of scales,
Which don't need changing every time that nurse says they are wet,
And then to have no shoes that always come untied—and yet—

TO HAVE NO SHOES THAT ALWAYS COME UNTIED

And yet, although it must be nice to swim around in scales,
To attend a school of porpoises and play at tag with whales,
To be on friendly speaking terms with jellyfish and eels,
And never to be sent to bed or told I'm late for meals;
Still, when I think of Christmas eve my resolution fails,
For what would Santa think if I hung up a pair of scales? —St. Nicholas.

The Painstaking French Soldier.

It is said that a French soldier, stationed at a picture gallery, had strict orders to allow no one to pass without first depositing his walking stick. A gentleman came with his hands in his pockets. The soldier, taking him by the arm, said: "Citizen, where is your stick?" "I have no stick." "Then you will have to go back and get one before I can allow you to pass."

As this man read his orders the intention was that, as a preliminary to inspecting the gallery, everybody was to deposit a stick—not that those who had a stick should not be allowed to carry it with them into the gallery.—Temple Bar.

AN ADVENTURE WITH WOLVES.

A Young Girl with the Aid of Her Faithful Pony Secures Four Bodies.

Once Nebraska had been to visit at her neighbor's and started for home when it was nearly dark; but as it was a moonlight night she did not feel lonely and had just thought, "What a lovely evening for a ride!" when she heard pattering steps. Looking around, she saw two wolves stealthily following. She urged her pony to his greatest speed, and tried to think out what she should do, for she was by this time only half way home, and seven miles from the nearest house.

She kept perfectly still because she knew that if she screamed before she was attacked, although it would scare the animals away for a time, they would return and would soon get used to the noise and not be frightened by it. She felt certain so few of them would not dare attack her, for wolves are very cowardly, but she also knew that they would summon the rest of the pack almost instantly.

The wolves were now in full pursuit, and she, glancing back, saw there were three. She was alarmed indeed now, and as they were gaining on her every minute she knew something must be done if she was to reach home alive. She knew the wolves would not long hesitate to attack her, for there was quite a large pack of them gathering. Her pony, too, sniffed danger, and the next instant, before she comprehended what he was going to do, he had turned and sprung right into the midst of the snarling pack, pawing and kicking right and left!

He had not forgotten his wild habits, nor how he had many times saved himself from the ferocious animals. And now his bravery stood his mistress in good stead, for as his feet came down on the wolves fierce yelps showed that he was not dealing gentle taps. In a few seconds there were four stretched dead on the ground, and the others had fled.

The young rider had thought, as soon as she knew what he was going to do, that she was safe if she could keep on his back, and this required all her strength and skill. When the pack was gone she looked down at the dead bodies and shuddered as she thought of her narrow escape. With no injuries and only a few anxious minutes she had secured four dead wolves, worth more than fifty dollars.

She dismounted and slung them over Pawnee's back and then galloped home.

No need of saying that her father and mother were surprised to see her come up to the door and exhibit triumphantly four slain wolves!

After this glorious exploit the pony was more petted than before. Did he not deserve it?—Kate M. Putney in St. Nicholas.

Every Inch a Soldier.

A good story is told on one of the officers connected with a local militia company. For a number of days before the inspection of the citizen soldiery the officer in question would each afternoon retire to the privacy of his own bedchamber, in the second story of his residence, and after dressing himself in full regimentals would put an imaginary company of soldiers through a lively course of drilling. He would clasp his sword at the hilt with one hand and at the point with the other, and then walk backward as if viewing the alignment of his troops.

It so happened that while going through this maneuver one afternoon, he walked backward into an open stairway and tumbled into a heap on the floor of the room below, and presented anything but a soldierly and dignified appearance as he lay there rubbing his bruises. His good wife was in the room attending to some household duty, and she rushed to the side of the fallen hero, and in anxious and tender voice asked him if he were hurt.

With a quick bound her husband regained his feet, and coming to an "attention," in a voice of thunder roared out: "Hurt? No, woman; what do you know about war?" and then ran back up stairs and dismissed his soldiers.—Anaconda (Mon.) Standard.

Her First News.

Among the uninjured passengers in the Ravenna disaster was a young man, a New Yorker, who had been on a visit to a maiden aunt living in a western city. She was a devout Christian, and had been much concerned over certain worldly tendencies in this her favorite nephew. On the day of his departure she had especially pleaded with him to renounce the mammon of unrighteousness, alternating her prayers with nervous fears over his coming journey.

When the young man got out of his car after the collision, considerably bruised and shaken up, he realized his aunt's anxiety if she should read of the accident, and rushing to the telegraph office wired her the emotional message. "Thank God, I'm saved."

The dispatch was received before any tidings came of the casualty, and the gentle soul supposed that her nephew had suddenly came to a realizing sense of his spiritual condition, and much rejoiced thereat she wrote a long letter of grateful congratulation to him, and told the happy news to her little coterie of intimates before she discovered her serious mistake.—Her Point of View in New York Times.

Handy to Have Around.

Among the conveniences, almost necessities, kept in the pantry by every housewife, are pieces of blotting paper, a bottle of iodide of potash and a solution of starch. This is most fortunate, because I read in the paper today that after the passage of an electric storm a good deal of ozone is left sneaking around behind the stove, in the cellarway, up in the garret and so on. With the articles mentioned lying handy on the pantry shelf, all one has to do to detect this ozone is to make a compound of the iodide of potash and the starch solution, and then dip the blotting paper in the compound. If it turns blue it is ozone. If it doesn't it's just as well.—Detroit Free Press.

A Fish That Turns to Water.

A curious animal is the medusa. Writing in 1701, Reaumur says: "It is a true sea water jelly, having little color or consistence. If we take one in our hands, the natural heat is sufficient to dissolve it into water." A medusa looks more like a mushroom than anything else, and is often of a pale blue or rose color, while in some localities it is violet. The tissue of a medusa is "so fragile that when abandoned by the waves on the beach it melts and disappears, without leaving a trace of its ever having existed." They are found principally in the arctic seas, and constitute one of the chief supports of the whale.—London Tit-Bits.

About one-third of the earth's population belongs to the various Christian sects. A reliable French statistician estimates that there are 1,195,450,000 people on the earth, and that 42 per cent. are of the white race, 44 per cent. of the yellow race, 11 per cent. of the negro race, 2 per cent. of the mixed Oceanic races and 1 per cent. of Indians.

Purim is the name of the solemn festival among the Jews in which they commemorate their deliverance from the wiles and stratagems of Haman, as recorded in the book of Esther. It is held in February.

Swallows and Crows.

Among the courageous small birds may be counted the family of swallows. The writer has often seen barn swallows fly downward and peck at the cat and dog, and more than once a sharp twitter, a whir of wings and a peck on the hat has reminded her, when standing in the barn door, that she was intruding on swallows' precincts.

About a half mile from the house is a high bank which is the home of a colony of bank swallows. The earth for some distance is thickly perforated with the roundish holes leading into their nests.

Not far from this bank a quantity of corn was one day scattered by accident upon the ground. The crows were quick to discover what had happened, and swooped down and began to devour the windfall.

Some of the swallows spied them at once and gave the alarm. I chanced to be sitting beneath a tree in full view of the scene. In less than a minute after the crows had settled to feeding, more than a hundred of the bank swallows had darted from their holes, and with angry twitters fell upon the intruders.

The attack was a complete surprise to the big black fellows, and as if realizing the futility of trying to cope with their small assailants, they rose from the ground in a body and took flight.

The swallows pursued them, darting, diving, striking at them above, below and from both sides. The crows were routed completely, and took refuge in a dense piece of woods a quarter of a mile away. Then the triumphant swallows turned about and sailed homeward, uttering many chirps and twitters of satisfaction as they flew.

For the hour or more that I remained in the field not a crow was to be seen near the corn. The swallows were masters of the field.—Cor. Youth's Companion.

We Are Not a Military People.

We Americans are not a military people. In view of our having carved our way into the wilderness with sword as well as with ax, of our having won our independence by arms, of our having come with abundant credit out of all our wars, of having carried through one of the most gigantic struggles of modern days, in which were fought battles almost unequaled in tenacity, this may appear to be an unwarranted statement. But it is true. It requires more than courage, more than ability to raise, to equip, to ration, to move and to command armies to make a military people.

The most splendid conduct in war for an all absorbing cause does not suffice. Having many of the essential qualities, we yet fall short of what the Romans were, the Germans are. Some sections of the country approach nearer to the military standard; but taken as a whole our lack of interest in army and navy, our thoroughly unbusinesslike way of handling our national problems of attack and defense, stamp us as the least military in our instincts of all the great peoples of the earth.—Colonel T. A. Dodge in Forum.

She Had Improved.

The Princess Charlotte, daughter of George IV, was a young woman of great spirit and originality. One day one of her teachers chanced to enter the room when the princess was reviling one of her attendant ladies, in great wrath, and, after giving her a lecture on hasty speech, he presented her with a book on the subject. A few days later he found her still more furious and using language even more violent. "I am sorry to find your royal highness in such a passion," said he; "your royal highness has not read the book I gave you." "I did, my lord!" cried she tempestuously: "I both read it and profited by it. Otherwise I should have scratched her eyes out!"—San Francisco Argonaut.

Some Notable Wagers.

Of single bets made on American horse races the following instances are taken from the records: Haughton bet Walton $14,000 to $1,000 against Girofle. Haughton bet Kelly $20,000 to $5,000 against Henlopen. Appleby & Johnson bet P. Lorillard $11,000 to $10,000 against Pizarro, and $25,000 to $5,000 against Leo in the same race. In each of these cases it is probable that the owners risked ten times these amounts on each of the races, as the bets above stated were only made with one bookmaker.—W. B. Curtiss in Forum.

How Parchment Came to Be Used.

When the literary jealousy of the Egyptians caused them to stop the supply of papyrus the king of Pergamos, a city in Asia Minor, introduced the use of sheepskin in a form called from the place of its invention, pergamona, whence our word "parchment" is believed to be derived. Vellum, a finer article made from calfskin, was also used. Many of the books done on vellum in the Middle Ages were transcribed by monks, and often it took years to complete a single copy.—C. A. Lynde in St. Nicholas.

Like Shooting Ghosts.

The impression when hunting paddymelons is of shooting at ghosts, what with the dim, mysterious light of the "bush," and the strange appearance and swift movement of the game. Paddymelons, like all the kangaroo tribe, are useless for food, except so far as their tails are concerned, which, being largely of glutinous texture, furnish material for capital soup, very like oxtail, but with a peculiar and agreeable "gamy" flavor. —Boston Journal.

WHAT SHALL WE PLANT.

High Prices for Special Products Lead to Overproduction.

The farm that is run for a number of years on a well defined, conservative system and a regular rotation of crops so that the soil may grow richer instead of poorer and so that each acre will produce a net income, be it over so small, is the farm that pays best in the long run. The farmer who goes skipping around from one crop to another, trying to catch the market, is generally a poor man and has a poor farm. These thoughts are suggested by the present high prices of grain, especially wheat. As is the general rule in such cases, undoubtedly many will exert themselves to sow the greatest possible breadth of wheat this fall and winter to the neglect of other crops. Many are now hunting up old rusty plows or buying new ones and feeding their teams extra grain rations, getting ready for the fray.

This may lead to disaster. The present high price of wheat is owing to the failure of the crops in Europe and other great wheat producing districts, our crops alone being good. We have the largest surplus ever known. Now it is not reasonable to suppose that there will be a general failure of wheat next season. The farmers of other great wheat growing regions will also probably strain every nerve to get in a large planting. And then as usual, flood following drouth, there will be a great surplus everywhere next year and prices go down accordingly. Nothing but the long predicted general war in Europe could save such a result. Again by the supposed rule that great floods follow drouths it may be our turn next year to have a general failure of wheat.

It is very much the safer rule that when a great commercial article of food is low then is the time to plant of that crop largely, if any change is to be made. Nevertheless, the best way is to keep up the regular rotation if it is a good one.

Examples are plenty. Yet how few profit by them. A year ago last fall the potato crop was nearly all lost by unlooked for early autumn rains. Speculators run the price up during the winter to 4 and 6 cents a pound. Last year nearly every farmer planted large fields and made money. This time the speculators got caught. The country speculators with more money than foresight bought the crop at a good price and consumers bought spuds in January, February and March for less than the price in November. In this case the speculators got the experience and the farmer got the money. But the farmer went in for a still larger crop and did not fully realize that there was no demand for a larger yield than the year before and that there were even too many potatoes last season. So at it they went and planted spuds early and late, all they could find room for. The result is that at no time since potatoes began to ripen would it pay to harvest them, and thousands of bushels will rot in the ground or be dug only for cow feed.

Is there not some danger of overproduction of fruit? Are we not planting too largely of specialties, too many prunes, raisins, etc., the same as we did a few years ago of wine grapes and apricots? Is not the strawberry and blackberry business overdone in the immediate vicinity of San Francisco? Have we not too many Early Crawford peach trees with many still planting them? The danger of creating future gluts on these fine specialties and neglecting other valuable fruits is apparently not thought of. Our farmers should, at their club and Alliance gatherings, compare notes on this matter of distribution and rotation of crops. Its importance cannot be too strongly urged. Of course experience is the only teacher of authority, but while experience is teaching its important lessons much valuable time and labor as well as money is lost to the farmer. What to plant, how to plant, when to plant? These are questions of vital importance in a new and growing country like ours.

Living on the Roof.

"You will find Mr. S. on the roof," replied the low voiced girl to our interrogatory. "He told me to tell you to walk right up stairs."

Slightly wondering, we mounted one flight, then another, still a third, and, tired at the knees and half out of breath, we climbed the steep pair of stairs that led to the roof.

Once on the roof we had come upon a scene of domestic felicity. There sat our genial host, lounging in neglige attire in a big armchair. Smoking the pipe of peace, he looked the picture of comfort. By his side, swinging to and fro with the breeze, his mate reclined in a hammock. Near at hand two children were playing and enjoying themselves to their hearts' content. After the first greetings were exchanged the host said: "This is our summer tea-room. What do you think of it?"

Then we took in the situation. The roof was the kitchen, dining and drawing room. It was also a blooming flower garden. All along the edges of the roof was a double row of boxes, each one filled with plants of different colors. The air was heavily laden with a pleasant perfume. The nostrils were tickled by a stealing odor of geranium and by the delicate heliotrope. Altogether it was a desirable change and relief from the smells that rise from the dusty streets below.

One corner of the roof seemed to be a regular bower of vines and climbing plants. Morning glories, scarlet beans and asters overran an arbor made of heavy wire. Beneath all this mass of green and color a rustic chair was almost hid from view.

The other corner of the housetop had been arranged for solid comfort. The roof was covered with Spanish matting, and in A Child's Life Saved.

POPLAR CREEK, Mont., March 2, 1891.
My little girl, 8 years old, had St. Vitus dance so severe that she was perfectly helpless, lying on the bed and crying when awake and had to make 3 or 4 attempts to even speak or swallow. Our physician was in daily attendance, but she continued to grow worse until I began to use Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic; then she improved rapidly and now she is perfectly well. I am confident my child's life was saved by this medicine and I recommend it to all who have nervous trouble of any kind and no one can say too much in praise of it. JOS. L. BAKER.
